Kreon's Point Of View on Antigone's Crime

When Kreon goes into an argument with Antigone in the book Antigone about the illegal burial of her brother Polonikes he quickly realizes Antigone is very stubborn about her point. Kreon tries to give Antigone a chance about denying burying her brother illegally, yet Antigone doesn't deny it. Kreon even says, "Did you know about my edict forbidding of this" and when Antigone responds yes he says "And yet you defy these laws"? Almost taken back by what Kreon has just heard he is even more dishonored to find out that Antigone has broken his law and has been bragging about it. From Kreon's point of view I can tell he is very angry with this and doesn't appreciate what Antigone has done. Personally I would be upset to if someone disobeyed me and then bragged about it. Kreon also feels that not only has Antigone dishonors him but she also her other brother Eteokles by burying Polonikes. Kreon even says to Antigone "Wasn't Eteokles your bother too"? Antigone responds "Yes by the same mother and father". Then Kreon responds, "How dare you insult his memory".

Kreon all in all felt that he was being disrespected by Antigone's actions. Although Antigone felt as if Kreon's laws went against the gods and as she did nothing wrong, Kreon still felt disobeyed. Kreon didn't appreciate the fact that Antigone broke the law or the she was bragging about, therefore he had reason to confront Antigone. Kreon has very strong feeling about his power and lastly even mentions to Antigone "Then share your love with the dead. Go and join them! While I'm alive no woman rules me!

this is great, Jerald.
